COVID-19 & Technology

Amid the increased reliance on technology during the pandemic, about nine-inten U.S. adults (93%) say that a major interruption to their internet or cellphone service would be a problem in their daily life, including 49% who foresee an outage being a very big problem.

As more companies moved to telework, one-quarter of those surveyed say they have used video calling, or an online conferencing service like Cisco Webex, to attend a work-related meeting due to the COVID-19 outbreak. [Read More at pewresearch.org]
